

Barber's list of desirable adult behaviors:

"Be happy with who she is.

"Be happy with who others are.

"Be well-adjusted, socialized and contribute toward society.

"I want her to be kind and caring. I would be so embarrassed if she ever adopted some of the behaviors she's seen exhibited by some adults currently in leadership roles.

"I want her to find the true man of her dreams.

"I want her to be an honest person and not take credit for things she isn't responsible for.

"I want her to be a liberal thinker and learn to be conservative financially.

"I want her to be a role model because she is a good and honest person. I want her role models to be good and moral people and do the right thing.

"I want her to have compassion and not attack everything that she doesn't believe in, but instead look for the good in all situations.

"I want her to be successful in whatever she chooses and to be smart enough to know that success is not measured in how much money you make [long, stern look at Trustees--who are volunteers].

"And I want her to have an understanding that she is only one of 7 billion people; that she or her ideas are not better than or worse than any other person so that she has compassion for people."